

Energy & Security

Alex Roland, Duke, speaking on “Different Ways of Knowing: Historians and Sociologists, Scientists and Engineers.”

Alex Roland (Ph.D. Duke University) is Professor Emeritus of History at Duke University.

Monday, October 15, 2012
11:45 am - 1:30 pm
Room 129
1911 Building
NCSU campus
Luncheon Served

Triangle Institute for Security Studies Online Registration at www.tiss-nc.org

The need for increased collaboration among social scientists, scientists, and engineers is well recognized. But the different cultures and epistemologies of scholars and practitioners educated in these fields can form a very real stumbling block. Professor Roland, a former marine, an engineer, and a military historian has a unique insight into what it is that divides us and how these barriers can be transcended. We are delighted to welcome him as our seminar leader at our third energy and security luncheon.

TISS/NCSU Energy and Security Initiative

